

ABSTRACT

The present invention provides a system and method for alerting a user of an occurrence on a computerized system, beginning with the recognition of any detectable occurrence on the computerized system. The detectable occurrence that initiates a communication of a signal to a communication port located on that computerized system. The port then routes the signal via a connection to an alarm-relay device, and this alarm-relay device designates the appropriate relay to initiate processes of an existing residential alarm system.